One winter morning the Giant looked out of his window as he was dressing. He did not hate the winter now, for he knew that it was merely the spring asleep, and that the flowers were resting. Suddenly he rubbed his eyes in wonder, and looked and looked. It certainly was a marvellous sight. In the farthest corner of the garden was a tree quite covered with lovely white blossoms. Its branches were all golden, and silver fruits hung down from them, and underneath it stood the little boy he had loved.

Downstairs ran the Giant in great joy, and out into the garden. He hastened across the grass, and came near to the child. And when he came quite close his face grew red with anger, and he said, "Who hath dared to wound thee ?" For on the palms of the child's hands were the prints of two nails, and the prints of two nails were on the little feet.

Questions :

7. Why didn't the Giant hate the winter now ?
8. What marvellous sight did he see ?
9. Where was the little boy standing ?
10. Why did the Giant run downstairs in great joy ?
11. Why did the Giant grow angry ?

III. A) 23. Write the summary of the following passage in about 100 words : 5

The aim of all who travel abroad are not the same. The common type of traveller desires to see as many objects of interest as he possibly can. If he can only, after his return home, say that he has seen such and such a temple, castle, picture gallery or museum he is perfectly satisfied. Therefore, when he arrives at a famous city, he rushes through it, so that he may get over as quickly as possible the task of seeing its principal sights and then hurry on to another city which he treats in the same uncereemonious way. Some others travel with a different mind set. Their minds are prepared by culture to feel intelligent admiration for the beauties of nature and art in alien land. Their object is not to see much but to see well. When they visit Paris or Rome they allow the spirit of the place to sink into their minds. They visit such monuments as the time at their disposal allows them to contemplate without irreverent haste. They stay for days at one place than paying short visits to many cities. They gain a deeper understanding of the places of visit. They get their intellectual curiosity and artistic taste satisfied. Travel refreshes their mind.
